Children and Media

Are your students interested in children and media? Do students have an opinion on the influence of media on children and teenagers? Do they want to learn about the way children are raised in the virtual environment these days? If so, this study programme is very interesting for your students in social work, social care and welfare. For more information please see the flyer.

Addiction studies

Most people can use legal and illegal substances recreationally without serious problems. However, for a small group of people these substances (alcohol, a joint, xtc etc.) can have serious consequences. The exchange programme 'Addiction Studies' is a program in which international and Dutch health care and social work students study alongside each other to develop solutions to specific problems in the field of 'Addiction Care'. Students develop skills in the treatment and support of people suffering with addiction and help them explore new ways to enrich their daily life. Students will become modern health care or social worker with a high skills set , including guidance counselling and collaborating with different professional partners. See the flyer for more information.

Intergenerational innovations

The co-existence of generations is a given in every society. With people living longer lives and a strong want for more social cohesion in our modern society, (future) professionals need to take a broader view on how people from all generations benefit from each other and address (social) issues together. Starting and facilitating intergenerational dialogue and collaboration is a key characteristic of a strong society. In an international setting students will gain knowledge about the different generations in our society. What kind of generations are there? What are their characteristics and why are they typical for that generation? Students will create awareness of the differences between generations but will also focus on the aspects they have in common. For more information please see the flyer.
